Taylor Renee Aldridge, Jessica Bell Brown, Kimberly Drew, and Jessica Lynne have taken over an art space in Soho to talk about black art in a summer-long project of public programming. The group kicked off The Black Art Incubator this past Saturday with a conversation between artist Lauren Halsey and art critic Antwaun Sargent, and they're just getting started.

In a series of public events, which run the gamut from workshops on archiving practices led by artists like Kameelah Rasheed, to a book swap and reception on July 28, The Black Art Incubator seeks to “provoke new understandings of the myriad sectors that comprise the contemporary art world.” This Thursday, visitors can catch artist Dread Scott leading a workshop on different strategies, both tried and unconventional, that artists can adopt to promote their work in the industry.
